RE: Teaching about Bringing People Up

Supervisor: Rachael Wilder for Human Resources

Manager: Colleen Saggese, Human Resources

Europe: Eckart Felbar

A few people around Kalindi were trying to work on a project, and Kalindi realized that they needed more help. The people themselves were not arranging to get the help, they were just trying to do it all themselves. Kalindi spoke the following in response to the situation:

- M
- Everyone on staff needs to have 3-4 people to come and help them when they are overloaded.
 - Kalindi said, "It's not fair - all of you have been in so many marathons with me. The other people need their marathons. It needs to be personal, that you are holding them in so much love."
 - Everybody is going to be doing about 10 or 15 things and then pulling other people up to help them.
